Q: How does the weight of a key affect its strength? With respect to key strength, which I suppose to be the ability of a key to be activated rapidly, how does a key with more weight affect it? A: The key strength is the effort required to trigger the lock mechanism. The most important influence on the key's strength is the material of which the key is made. The most common materials are steel, brass or plastic. To ensure safe and reliable operation, the key's strength must not exceed the strength of the lock mechanism. A common key strength rating is 1 ton. Tons are weights of 1000 kg that are used to measure the weight of a large vehicle. A ton is a commonly used unit for key strength, but other measures are used as well, such as the unit g/m² (gravitational force / area of the key contact surface).

I tried working around this by setting the right padding to one the size of the div, but then the text wraps onto a second line (unwanted). The code: Can anyone tell me how I can achieve both text centering and an unbroken block of text? CSS `.container { display:table; width:auto; margin:0 auto; }`
`.content {`
