`find_element_by_xpath("//div[@class='button-group__btn'][contains(.,'READ_REQUESTS')]"` I'm trying to find an element of a certain class name in Selenium. The element itself is in a table cell and will be loaded with data later. When I do a print statement, the xpath is correct, but when I try to `find_element_by_xpath` it fails and I don't understand why. When I search on the web, people do the same thing in a single line, and it looks so simple, but I just can't get it to work. Here is my code `browser.find_element_by_xpath("//div[@class='button-group__btn'][contains(.,'READ_REQUESTS')]").click()` I also tried `browser.find_element_by_xpath("//div[@class='button-group__btn'][contains(.,'READ_REQUESTS')]").click()` This is the error I get `InvalidSelectorException: Message: invalid selector: The result of the xpath expression "//div[@class='button-group__btn'][contains(.,'READ_REQUESTS')]" is: [object HTMLDivElement] (Session info: chrome=71.`

Details Category:PC utilitiesQ: Android: How to retrieve values from a link in android webview? I have a webview showing html links from a server (which I can't change). In one of those links, I would like to have some values from a query string. The problem is I don't know how to retrieve that from the link. Here's the link from the server: I want to retrieve the values for `q=george+bush` from the url above so I can use them in my application. I already figured out I can use the javascript `eval()` but it would be nice to do it more natively in Android. Any ideas? A: In the `webViewClientCallback`, you can use the `getDataFromUrl()` method to access the requests. This is not part of the JavaScript, so it is a native API. German Minister of Defence Ursula von der Leyen paid tribute to the Belgian peacekeepers who died in Mali as she attended the opening of an EU training centre on the African continent. The "third-generation outpost" has been inaugurated in the city of Birao, which is adjacent to Bamako and is home to about 14,000 people, with more than 26,000 heavily armed rebels fighting to overthrow the government, and to retain control of the region. "I am very touched and very grateful for the sacrifice that so many people made in the name of Belgium," the German minister said. The project is the largest EU military training operation in Africa, and will provide training for more than 2,000 soldiers from 23 African countries, including combatants, observers and officials. "It will be a real child of peace," von der Leyen added. But the conflict has also sparked a new wave of emigration out of Mali, with some 5,000 people leaving the country. Pieter-Stephane Viaene, a spokesman for the EU commission's delegation to Mali, said fears of the country's uncertain future had prompted many Malians to leave. "Right now is a time of insecurity, and people don't know what will happen next," 82138339de
